China’s tech sector has grown in significance in recent years. With China aiming to establish itself as a technological powerhouse, many tier II cities are upgrading their value chains as they look to shift away from serving as traditional manufacturing hubs.

Chengdu, the capital city of Sichuan province and new tier-1 city in China is entering a phase of economic transformation and has emerged as the upcoming tech & innovation city of China. They are renowned for their openness, creativity and liveliness and was ranked number 1 in Midwest China for R&D capabilities, innovation and talent resources. Chengdu is not only welcoming to foreign talent but also has appropriate policies to help foreign entrepreneurs set up their venture in the city.

Singapore and Sichuan has enjoyed good economic relationship for the past 23 years with the Singapore-Sichuan Hi-Tech Innovation Park (SSCIP) being one of the key joint development projects. The 10.34 sq km park located in Chengdu High Tech Development Zone focuses on high tech industries such as biomedical science, interactive digital media, artificial intelligence and environmental technologies.
